Real Concerns

Editor:

No matter what side of the abortion issue you are on, no one has a right to dictate mastery over your own body. My response to the news that the U.S. Supreme Court is poised to take away abortion rights in this country after 50 years was physical ("Rally for Reproductive Rights in Eureka," posted May 4). My whole body seized up, my muscles tensed, my shoulders tightened, my stomach hurt, I became nauseous. My outrage and trauma is breathtaking and heartbreaking. As I begin to process what is happening in this country and what it means for women and girls, I see that everything is connected.

Donald Trump packed the court with "conservative" judges who would do his bidding and lead us to this moment in time. But these governmental changes are not conservative, they are cruel and barbaric, they are white supremacy and minority rule in action. Trump and his cronies orchestrated and nearly succeeded in pulling off a coup to bring down our democracy. Think of it. If his mob of supporters and the people in his administration had been successful, Mike Pence and Nancy Pelosi may have been killed. We may have had a civil war, a dictatorship, or both.

The danger is still real. We must stand up and take positive action. Vote people out of office who want to take away women's rights, Black and brown people's rights, LGBTQ rights, immigrants' rights, human rights. We must not let the country go back into the dark ages in 2022 and 2024. It matters for our children and grandchildren. We cannot let democracy die.

Offshore Wind Concerns

Editor:

The California Coastal Commission's decision to allow initial investigation into the feasibility of offshore wind generators ("Coastal Commission Moves Offshore Wind Forward," April 14) will, once again, challenge our pristine coastline. The determination allows energy companies and foreign investors to establish multiple offshore wind generators, spanning 132,000 acres of our coastline.

We all understand the need for cleaner electricity sources, and these wind generators seem to provide one answer. However, there are serious risks. As we are positioned on the Pacific Flyway, millions of migrating pelagic birds will make their way past these massive wind generators. The potential for numerous deaths and migration displacement, as we have seen with land wind generators, is a high risk factor. In addition, ocean mammals, including whales and dolphins, and other ocean animals, continuously use these waters, presenting an unknown safety risk. Coincidentally, the current Audubon magazine (Spring,

A major concern is these wind generators will degrade our pristine and valued coastline, as well. Even 21 miles off shore, these numerous 900-foot-tall generators will always be visible from our shoreline. As Humboldt County Supervisor and Coastal Commissioner Mike Wilson states, "These structures will be seen from virtually everywhere." We will never again be able to appreciate our magnificent ocean view without seeing these generators.

I understand the need for clean energy sources, and support the need to develop other energy sources. But I don't want to stand at Centerville Beach, Trinidad or Sue-Meg park and ask why we allowed such turbines in our once pristine oceans.

Gateway Concerns

Editor:

After looking over the draft development plans for the proposed Gateway project, I was immediately opposed to the idea of eight-story apartments looming over the Arcata Bottoms, an area of known geological hazards, as well as tsunami and storm surges exacerbated by sea level rise. Bob McPherson described those in stark terms in his thoughtful letter to the editor some weeks ago (Mailbox, Feb. 10).

Several colleagues also enlightened me to the city's poorly executed planning process, a process where much was done without much opportunity for community input. This is contrary to how my beloved city has handled things in the past and very disappointing.

But the clincher was the immensely enlightening letter ("Audit") by Dr. Andrea Tuttle, a much respected researcher and supporter of our community and how we wend our way through the inevitable growing pains of increasing population. Her insights demand re-evaluation and extensive revision of the awful plan put forward by city staff. Here is a link to Dr. Tuttle's letter: www.madriversonline.com/articles/a-detailed-audit-of-the-draft-gateway-area-plan/. I urge all residents to read this letter for a comprehensive understanding of the ramifications of the Gateway plan in its present form.

Diversify the Curriculum

Editor:

Thank you for featuring the important work on Indigenous-centered curricula that young activists are promoting in the local public schools ('Long Overdue,' April 28). I have spent the last six years researching youth identity, participation choices and resilience in local high schools. Data from interviews, focus groups, surveys and ethnography clearly show that BIPOC students have to armor up every day in schools and communities to withstand the slew of microaggressions, misrepresentations and silences in the curricula. Negative experiences in schools and towns contribute to how young people feel about themselves and the shape their dreams take.

Curricula connected to local Indigenous culture, such as that featured in the recent NCJ cover story, alongside things like Yurok language electives (which are currently offered at four high schools: Eureka High School, McKinleyville High School, Hoopa Valley High School and Del Norte High School) are examples of providing educational access that promotes respectful pluriethnic coexistence. Yurok language classes affirm identities of heritage-speakers and help address intergenerational trauma by validating Native cultural practices. For white students, these classes educate them about Indigenous peoples as contemporary neighbors rather than as past folklore. And students from other minority backgrounds report feeling more motivated to investigate their own family backgrounds and to take pride in the identities they find there. In short, diverse curricular offerings do many kinds of positive things for students

Still Working Toward a Solution

Editor:

J.A. Savage's article ("Geopolitics Undermine Energy Authority's Solar Project," posted May 1) accurately portrayed some of the challenges Redwood Coast Energy Authority (RCEA) and other electricity suppliers currently face in meeting our renewable energy goals. As has been widely reported, the U.S. Department of Commerce's ongoing investigation of alleged circumvention of tariffs imposed on solar panels imported from China is temporarily having a major chilling effect on development of new solar projects in the U.S.

The 100-megawatt Sandrini solar project being developed in Kern County to provide clean power for RCEA's Humboldt County customers may be delayed and/or see cost increases due to uncertainty around the tariff, along with the inflation and supply chain constraints that are playing out globally. However, contrary to the Journal's narrative, RCEA's contract with the developer of the solar project has not been "nullified" and the project has not been "derailed." RCEA is in negotiations with the developer to find a solution that will allow the project to proceed with schedule and price terms that work for RCEA and our energy customers.

More Oversight Needed

Editor:

In Recognition of Elder Abuse Awareness Month, I would like to bring attention to this real problem in our community. There are articles about the failure of CWS to respond to reports of child abuse and this is certainly an eye-opener for our community ... these little ones are our future and deserve protection. However, speaking of "the future," we also have similar problems in the senior community, and they also need our protection.

I am speaking specifically about those living in the local nursing homes, and our assisted living facilities. Unfortunately, these facilities are for-profit and privately owned, thus no local regulatory oversight. It ultimately is the responsibility of each facility/staff to report any suspected abuse. Because such reports could result in unwanted publicity, a "fine," other disciplinary action or loss of revenue, I am greatly concerned they are failing to report as mandated. The agencies that oversee these facilities are in Santa Rosa; you can imagine how quickly they respond. I have been involved with CASA and know the problems that exist in our community, but now I am working with the "other end of life" and I see those same problems almost daily.

I wish we had an authority, such as the grand jury, to do a full investigation of the day-to-day operations of these facilities. Our program works closely with APS and HCSO, but it seems they all suffer from lack of staff, turnover, inadequate training in working with elders, etc., which makes their jobs difficult in responding to reports of abuse. As a community, we must get together to protect both our young and our old ... we all will be "there" some day and I am hoping these types of reports will become obsolete.

As the long-term care ombudsman program manager, I urge you to become another set of eyes for these precious individuals, whether young or old — volunteer in your community.

Suzi Fregeau, Eureka

Up for Judgment

Two vie to become Humboldt's next Superior Court judge

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Four years after Humboldt County's first contested judicial election in 20 years, we have another, with two candidates vying for the seat being vacated by Judge Christopher Wilson's retirement. And seeing as an incumbent judge hasn't faced a challenger locally in decades, whoever wins a seat on the bench in June seems likely to be there for a while.

To become a superior court judge in California is to enter rarified air — after all, there are only 58 superior courts in the state, one in each county, though some have multiple courthouses. Judicial terms span six years, with vacancies filled through gubernatorial appointments, and judges wield a tremendous amount of discretion in their courtrooms, whether hearing civil or criminal cases.

In civil cases — which include family law proceedings, probate cases, petitions for court orders and claims — a judge's decision can determine whether a family stays together, how an estate is dispersed, what records are determined to be open to public view and who's at fault in a given dispute. In criminal cases — which include felonies, misdemeanors and infractions, like traffic tickets — judges determine whether there is enough evidence to support a charge, what evidence will be admissible at trial, how a jury will be instructed on the law and, ultimately, what constitutes a just sentence for those found guilty.

The two candidates looking to enter this fray are Ben McLaughlin and Steven Steward, both of whom have backgrounds in criminal law.

Currently working as a deputy public defender, McLaughlin, 51, grew up in Palo Alto and has lived in Humboldt County for 15 years. After graduating from Vanderbilt University as a history major with an emphasis in Latin American history in 1994, McLaughlin received his law degree from Santa Clara University School of Law in 1999. He spent a stint in civil litigation before focusing on criminal law for much of the last 17 years, including seven years serving as a deputy district attorney — prosecuting violent felonies — and five as a deputy public defender in Del Norte and Humboldt counties.

Steward, 42, meanwhile, grew up just outside Los Angeles and moved to Humboldt County in 1998 to attend Humboldt State University and pursue a degree in political science, before leaving the area to attend graduate school at San Francisco State University. Steward then moved to Washington, D.C., where he worked for a member of Congress before attending law school at The Catholic University's Columbus School of Law, while working to provide legal services to indigent clients at a domestic violence clinic. After getting his law degree and returning to California, Steward spent seven years representing low-income defendants in criminal courts in Los Angeles and the Bay Area, before he and his family moved back to Humboldt County to raise children. Steward has worked as a deputy district attorney since 2017, prosecuting serious and violent crimes, as well as serving as the office's lead environmental crimes prosecutor.

In the lead up to the June 7 election, the Journal caught up with both candidates and asked them to answer a handful of questions about their backgrounds, perspectives and personalities. To view their full responses, visit www.northcoastjournal.com. (Spoiler alert, asked to name their favorite fictional judge, one candidate tapped Judge Chamberlain Haller from the movie My Cousin Vinny, while the other named Judge Smalls from Caddyshack.) But here's how the candidates weighed in on the more substantive questions.

Asked about judge's role in making Humboldt County a more just community, McLaughlin said it's essential that judges treat all parties respectfully, with dignity, noting this is especially important in civil cases with litigants representing themselves in the process because they cannot afford counsel but who "have an absolute right to access the judicial process." On the criminal side, he said it's important judges protect the constitutionally guaranteed rights of the accused, while making sure victims and survivors are heard by the court.

"Victims and survivors must feel as though their rights and safety are considered and appropriately prioritized," McLaughlin said.

When it comes to sentencing, McLaughlin said certain crimes — gun violence, sexual violence, homicides — "require a prison term," while in other cases, justice "may require a probationer to repay a business owner, remove graffiti, serve custodial time or get his/her/their act together through mental health and addiction counseling."

Steward, meanwhile, said judges have a central role in making Humboldt County a fair community by making sure their decisions are made "fairly and free from political or other influences," avoiding "even the appearance of impropriety."

"Whether a defendant is rich or poor, powerful or not, my record shows that I have treated everyone equally and with respect," Steward said. "I will bring to bear this experience and my proven track record of impartiality to make Humboldt a more just community that we can all be proud of."

Asked about the cyclical nature of childhood trauma, drug and alcohol abuse and crime, Steward said he's "committed to breaking the cycle of drug and alcohol-related offenses that make up the bulk of our local arrests." Steward said the dual epidemic of substance abuse and a lack of mental health treatment is challenging, saying he'd look at "diversionary models" that address underlying causes of criminality for non-violent offenders "who show a sincere desire to seek rehabilitative service," pointing to Drug Court as an example of a successful program.

"I am proud to say that I am a board member of Waterfront Recovery Center in Eureka, which is a dual diagnosis facility that does transformational work in our community," Steward said. "I am not solely spending time in the courtroom prosecuting cases, I am working, on my own time, to address these issues and would continue to do so as a judge."

McLaughlin, meanwhile, said breaking these cycles is "where the rubber meets the road," noting that addressing the generational trauma within Indigenous communities locally, and childhood trauma more broadly, would help resolve some of Humboldt County's chronic issues.

"When offenders are addicted or ill or commit criminal acts because of generational or physical trauma, the model being developed by the Yurok Tribe is informative," McLaughlin said. "The Yurok's approach to overall wellness is thoughtful and considers a person's individual and cultural histories. Applying this approach across the board would pay dividends, I think."

McLaughlin also said Drug Court eligibility needs to be expanded to include low-level offenders, and in cases where probation is not appropriate, McLaughlin said he'd like to see the expansion of re-entry programs that help felons transition back into the community with sponsorships and job training.

"The dignity of a job — and hopefully health insurance — can also help break the cycle of trauma," he said.

Asked how he would find work-life balance in a job with a workload some have described as "daunting," Steward said he doesn't want to be a judge because it's easy but because "it is worthwhile." Steward described his current job as "demanding," saying he finds balance by "getting into our beautiful forest and beaches" with his family.

"The work is demanding and at times isolating but Humboldt deserves a judge who cares more about providing justice than vacation time," he said.

McLaughlin, meanwhile, said he hopes he'll find the job "intellectually stimulating and professionally challenging," adding that he recognizes a healthy work-life balance is singularly important. He said he has worked to develop personal boundaries that allow him to spend time on himself and with his family and friends, noting it's been his practice to get to work as early as needed to finish up during the day to preserve evenings with his family.

"That said, I understand what the job entails," McLaughlin said, adding that when in trial, he'll work "as long as and whenever necessary to ensure that the business of the court is handled as efficiently as possible."

Both candidates are slated to square off in a candidate forum on KEET TV hosted by the League of Women Voters Humboldt County at 7 p.m. on June 1. Check it out and make sure to vote June 7.

Arcata Strips Defiant Watson of Assignments, Limits Access to Staff

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Arcata City Councilmember Brett Watson addresses the sustained findings that he harassed a city employee while the balance of the council listens in silence. Screenshot

After hearing nearly two dozen residents plead with Councilmember Brett Watson to resign in the wake of a scathing investigative report that he abused his power and harassed a city employee, the Arcata City Council passed a series of measures May 17 aimed at protecting city staff, while limiting Watson's access to City Hall.

Watson, meanwhile, struck a defiant tone, stating there is "absolutely zero chance" he will resign from office while arguing that he is innocent of the allegations against him and himself a victim of harassment at the hands of city staff.

With Watson on a figurative island, the council passed a series of motions 3-1, with Watson dissenting, to direct staff to pursue a workplace violence restraining order against him, to strip Watson of committee and other council member assignments, to take the steps necessary — including changing key codes — to restrict all council members' access to city hall and to direct Watson cease communications with city staff outside council meetings, to refrain from any physical contact with them and to refrain from any personal correspondences.

The council briefly discussed bringing back an agenda item to censure — or formally rebuke Watson — at a future meeting, but staff explained such a process would give the council member an opportunity to defend himself, prompting Councilmember Meredith Matthews to say she didn't want to "give this any more oxygen," a notion Mayor Stacy Atkins-Salazar and Vice-mayor Sarah Schaefer seemed to support.

The council's actions come on the heels of a third-party investigative report compiled by Kramer Workplace Investigations, which was called in to investigate allegations that Watson had engaged in a prolonged pattern of sexual harassment and using his position of authority to make undue demands of a staff members' time and attention. The 28-page report, which deemed the allegations "undisputed" and is corroborated by hundreds of pages of supporting text messages and emails between Watson and the employee, sustained findings that Watson engaged in "unprofessional and inappropriate conduct," and "abuse of his power as a city councilmember" over the course of more than two years. (Read more about the report and its findings here.)

The investigative report detailed how Watson suffered from mental health issues, including depression and anxiety, while navigating marital problems and the death of his father. The text messages in the document show he increasingly came to depend on the city employee, texting after hours, on weekends and while she was on vacation, and sharing intimate details of his life, from his feelings about his wife and the depths of his depression to changes in medication he was taking. Repeatedly, he asserted she was critical to his mental health and ability to function as a council member, according to the report, which also notes Watson made a custom of demanding long hugs from her.

Those who addressed the council on the issue during public comment were unequivocal in stating Watson should resign, with some referencing a statement Watson issued last night asserting that he has never harassed anyone, that his relationship with the employee was consensual, arguing she "enjoyed" spending time with him, "looked forward to it," "encouraged it" and even baked him cookies.

Resident Jessica Silva (who is also a Journal contributor) said she wanted to come to give Watson a piece of her mind but has come to believe he can't hear any of us. Instead, she discussed the power dynamic at play between a city employee and one of her five bosses on the council. "Implied consent from baked cookies" is not a thing, Silva said, and "there is no one-size-fits-all response to harassment."

"Compliance within an imbalanced power dynamic is not consent," Silva said.

A group of four city department directors read the council a joint letter, pledging support for the city's anti-harassment policy, urging the council to "send a strong message" and do what it can to protect employees from harassment. At the conclusion of their comment, Watson charged that one of the directors had faced a harassment complaint "not that long ago," thanking him for speaking.

said she read the entire report and 500-plus pages of supporting materials, saying harassment is really about one person exercising power and control over another. And Pereira said the report shows Watson abused his power in more ways than one, pointing to the report detailing allegations that he threatened the employee's job, disregarded state laws designed to protect government transparency and public trust, and bragged about his ability to manipulate the council to vote how he wanted.

But Pereira said she realized the council doesn't have any mechanism for removing Watson from office. Though she urged the council to "use whatever tools" it had to ensure a safe workplace, she also warned of "the very real possibility that he doesn't have the humility to resign" and the city would instead have to wait until he's up for re-election in November to purge him from office.

Another former councilmember, Elizabeth Conner, called Watson's attitude toward democracy and his role on the council "horrendous" and "terrible," saying the investigative report is so convincing that there's no additional evidence that could be presented to change her mind that Watson is unfit for office.

The chorus of calls for Watson's resignation continued with Aristeia Saulsbury reading a letter signed by more than 50 local women.

"Most of us have known a 'Brett Watson' in our lives — a man who took liberties while passing the blame on to the victims of his harassment," Saulsbury read. "Most of us have experienced or witnessed the victim of harassment being left to defend themselves, only supported by whisper networks. We are done accepting men like you that treat this behavior as the norm. ... You must resign."

When public comment came to a close and the discussion returned to the council dais, Watson took center stage. He aggressively questioned Tom O'Connell, a labor attorney representing the city through its insurance carrier, before repeating his claims that his relationship with the city employee was 100 percent consensual and alleging that witnesses had lied to investigators, while pointing out minor errors in the report.

"Just to make it clear," he said, "there's absolutely zero chance I'm going to resign."

Watson alleged the investigation also violated city policy, failing to notify him of the allegations against him, while claiming the city also failed to investigate his claims that he had been the victim of harassment. He then picked select text messages from the hundreds of pages included in the investigative report that included the employee saying something nice about him, or answering a compliment of his with one of her own, pointing to them as though they were evidence harassment could not have occurred.

Some of the exchanges Watson pointed to, however, also evidence a relationship that clearly crossed the bounds of that of employer and employee. In one he pointed to, he noted he told the employee as she was leaving on a vacation that he was "miss [her] so much" and was "going to be depressed" in her absence. In another, he texted, "You mean so much to me." He also said there were "many" examples of the employee giving him marital advice.

Watson closed his remarks reiterating that he has no intention of resigning his post but said "if the staff member wants to take responsibility for her role in the relationship," he "would consider it."

"I've gone through an intensive rehabilitation and I'm in a very strong place and want to serve my community," he said, referencing a 30-day in-patient program he attended late last year.

When Watson finished and the balance of the council picked up the discussion, they made clear their desire to move quickly and then get on to other city business, saying the ongoing discussion could be harmful to victims in the immediate case and victims of abuse and harassment more generally. The council then moved quickly through the series of votes to strip Watson of committee assignments, limit his access to staff and pursue a restraining order against him, with the embattled council member chiming in periodically and repeatedly casting the sole dissenting vote on the motions.

After the council's vote, City Attorney Nancy Diamond was asked to present briefly on the process the public would have to initiate to recall Watson from office. She explained proponents would have to collect signatures equaling 12 percent of voters who cast a ballot in the last general election, which would then be verified by the Humboldt County Elections Office and, if sufficient, the matter would be called for a special election. But the process spans some months, she said.

"It won't happen in time for the November ballot," Diamond said.

With that, the council moved to adjourn.

"We will try to do our best to move forward," Atkins-Salazar said.

Protecting the Titans: New Trail Provides Safe Access to Ancient Grove

A once hidden trail blazed off the beaten path is now a formal North Coast attraction.

Today, if you walk along the Mill Creek Trail in Del Norte County's Grove of The Titans, you'll tread on raised metal walkways that allow water to flow and ferns to grow beneath your feet. You'll cross a wooden bridge, climb perfectly placed stairs and duck through nature-made tunnels of green, all the while taking in a striking view of some of the world's tallest trees.

But it wasn't always this way.

Before it reopened with ribbon-cutting ceremony May 21, the area around the Mill Creek Trail — a 3-mile path that weaves through Jedediah Smith Redwoods State Park in Redwood National and State Parks (RNSP) — was largely untouched.

The rise of social media over the past two decades meant more and more locals and tourists spread the word about the lauded grove. A network of informal, secret trails formed and visitors trampled over the ferns and undergrowth to marvel at the beauty of the giant trees. But this came at a significant cost to the giant trees.

Redwood root systems were damaged and plants on the forest floor died. Foot traffic eroded soil and pushed litter into the streams, putting a strain on coho and steelhead spawning areas.

"It is our duty to protect our resources — we needed to protect this grove, but we also wanted to allow people to access it because it is a pretty significant experience," said Erin Gates, deputy superintendent for Redwood National and State Parks and California State Parks North Coast Redwood District. "What we were able to do is realign Mill Creek Trail, build an elevated walkway so visitors are able to experience this grove without letting their footprints do damage that is irreversible."

RNSP was dubbed a UNESCO World Heritage Site for housing some of the last surviving old-growth redwoods and for its connection to tribal nations' history.

To save what was left of the old-growth forests, California State Parks, Save the Redwoods League, Redwood Parks Conservancy and the National Park Service devised a plan in 2018 to create a formal trail in the Grove of the Titans that would limit the human impact on the surrounding nature.

The Mill Creek Trail is now realigned and includes an elevated walkway with a 1,300-foot-long boardwalk through the Grove of Titans, along with stairs and bridges that allow root systems to work and vegetation to grow unfettered underneath hikers' footsteps. ADA-accessible parking and restrooms have also been added along Howland Hill Road.

Parks crews removed informal trails, planted new ferns to replace those lost to foot traffic and hand-carried 128 tons of construction materials into the site in an effort not to further damage the grove.

"Balance is key when planning and building a trail in such a rare and beautiful ecosystem," said Jessica Carter, director of parks and public engagement for Save the Redwoods League in a statement. "With the realigned trail, new boardwalk and signage, we're respecting the natural grandeur of this special place while also welcoming all visitors to experience and enjoy Grove of Titans for generations to come."

California State Parks North Coast Redwoods Superintendent Victor Bjelejac said he encourages visitors to be kind to one another along the trails and to take their time.

"Don't be in a hurry, stop, look around ... Don't rush to this spot or that spot. Enjoy the environment that you're in," Bjelejac said, adding that only 5 percent of original redwood forest still exists today. "In this district, we have 50 percent of all those old growth redwoods. This is a place where you actually have old growth groves and it's spectacular. So come with kindness. Don't be in a rush and enjoy what you see."

The trail now also has signs that provide forest facts, guidance for safe trail use and translations into the Tolowa Dee-ni' native language. The Tolowa Dee-ni nation was frequently consulted on the renovation, as the Grove of the Titans is part of Tolowa ancestral land.

Amanda O'Connell, tribal councilmember for Tolowa Dee-ni' nation, called the renovation a "wonderful project" that addressed the human impact on the grove.

"The tribe obviously still has a strong connection to this place, being our ancestral lands, but it's now managed by the park system and so it's nice to be able to have these working relationships to be able to collaborate on the continued stewardship," O'Connell said. "It feels really good to see a project come to completion to do that."

Renovations cost approximately $4 million and were funded by Save the Redwoods League supporters, California Natural Resources Agency through Proposition 68, the Parks, Environment, and Water Bond Act of 2018, more than $900,000 of in-kind contributions and $205,000 from Redwood Parks Conservancy donors.

Save the Redwoods League funding also included a significant challenge grant from donor Josie Merck of Connecticut. Merck came from Connecticut to attend the ribbon-cutting, which opened with song and prayer from members of the Tolowa Dee-ni nation.

"I knew already I was humbled before I got here, but nothing could speak to the true experience of being here and being sung here and prayed for and danced to as it was done," Merck said at the ceremony. In a speech, she called those in attendance — trail crews, local parks leaders and members of the Tolowa Dee-ni nation — "humans of the highest order." Then she spoke to the titans: "You trees are more than our elders, you are survivors."

And they will continue to survive if we tiny humans keep up our efforts and stay on the trail.

Redwood National and State Parks is recruiting volunteers to monitor the trails and greet park visitors and care for the Grove of Titans. To get involved, contact JedSmithTitans@gmail.com.

Karen Paz Dominguez

To Audit and Control

The unprecedented battle for fiscal oversight of the county of Humboldt By Thadeus Greenson

As a thought exercise, take out a piece of paper and write down the names of Humboldt County's last two auditor-controllers. It's a safe bet that if you correctly scribbled Joseph Mellett and Michael Giacone, you either work in county government or are the most dedicated of civic enthusiasts.

All that is to say, it's beyond noteworthy that incumbent Auditor-Controller Karen Paz Dominguez has become one of the most recognizable — and polarizing — names in local government since bursting on the political scene a handful of years ago. Then the assistant auditor-controller, Paz Dominguez stepped before the Board of Supervisors during the public comment period of its Nov. 7, 2017, meeting to charge her office was grossly understaffed and mismanaged to the point it was unable to carry out its essential functions.

Within months, Paz Dominguez's predecessor had retired and, in June of 2018, voters elected Paz Dominguez to fill his shoes with 55 percent of the vote. The ensuing four years have seen Paz Dominguez become increasingly embattled, as the Board of Supervisors has voted to censure her and passed a resolution declaring no confidence in her job performance, 13 of the county's 19 department heads signed a letter stating she "has failed to fulfill the duties and responsibilities of her position," increasingly putting millions of dollars of state and federal funding at risk, and the California Attorney General's Office has taken the extraordinary step of naming her personally in a lawsuit alleging she's violated state law by failing to file timely financial reports with the State Controller's Office.

All of this has come to a head as the June 7 election looms, with Paz Dominguez continuing to cast herself as a reform agent facing unprecedented backlash simply for doing her job and working to transform her office from one that "rubber stamps" other departments' fiscal documents to one that truly protects the public interest.

The Office

The Humboldt County Auditor-Controller's Office is tasked with providing financial and accounting support to the county's departments, special districts and a host of partnering agencies that have funding streams run through county coffers. The office is responsible for accounting for property tax revenues, while apportioning and distributing them to the various entities that rely on them, including school districts. The office audits and issues county payroll checks, audits and issues claims for payment, issues receipts for all payments received by the county, documents the county's financial transactions and prepares a host of financial reports.

The Candidates

Hired by the county in 2017 as the assistant auditor-controller, Paz Dominguez, 34, moved to Humboldt County 17 years ago after growing up in El Salvador and Los Angeles. She graduated from Humboldt State University with a degree in business administration with an emphasis in accounting, and says she spent 10 years working with two local CPA firms, where she got experience in "direct accounting, taxation and auditing," before joining the county's employment.

Challenging Paz Dominguez in the race is Cheryl Dillingham, 60, a career public employee who spent 30 years working for the county of Humboldt — including 12 years in the Auditor-Controller's Office, 10 years in Public Works and a stretch in the County Administrative Office — before stepping in as finance director for the city of Rio Dell three years ago. After growing up in the San Fernando Valley and Ventura County, Dillingham moved to Humboldt County 41 years ago and received a degree in mathematics and a master's in business administration, both focused on accounting, from Humboldt State University.

Announcing her campaign at a kickoff event in Eureka in April, Dillingham said she doesn't like "public speaking or politics," saying she's most comfortable "doing accounting and dealing with numbers," but said she was stepping into the race "because there is an urgent need to fix the county's accounting and reporting" and she is "uniquely qualified" to get things back on track.

With all the discord swirling around the Auditor-Controller's Office, it's noteworthy that the campaign's principals have so far refrained from the kind of trench warfare one might expect.

While Dillingham has run on a platform of competence, experience and "no drama," she's largely refrained from being directly critical of Paz Dominguez, who she worked with for a stretch of about eight months when she was appointed interim auditor-controller after Mellett's retirement and before Paz Dominguez assumed office.

In fact, Dillingham has been complimentary numerous times — saying Paz Dominguez has done an "excellent job of addressing issues" identified in a 2018 Humboldt County Civil Grand Jury report detailing deficiencies in the county's fiscal oversight and controls. She's also praised Paz Dominguez's efforts to modernize the office by automating certain functions.

Dillingham has also seemed sympathetic to many of the office's struggles. Asked about issues with county payroll at a recent forum, Dillingham said it's a heavy lift, pointing to the fact that the county turns around payroll in the same amount of time as little Rio Dell, despite having nearly 2,000 more employees still using paper timecards. She has echoed Paz Dominguez's claims that the department remains short staffed and struggles to recruit and retain employees, particularly trained accountants. And she has conceded the office faced unprecedented challenges in working through a global pandemic that forced most employees to work remotely, posing unique complications with the county's decentralized accounting systems.

But asked to differentiate herself from Paz Dominguez and pinpoint exactly what she views as wrong with the office as it currently functions, and what specifically she would step in looking to change, Dillingham circled back to a question both candidates had been asked at a recent forum hosted by KMUD News: Which is more important, timeliness or accuracy?

Paz Dominguez answered the question unequivocally.

"Accuracy. One-hundred percent. Accuracy is the most important thing. Otherwise, what's the point? I say this because you can be timely all day long but if the information is inaccurate, what purpose did you serve?" she said, adding that inaccurate work will lead to duplications of efforts, as it will have to be fixed. "Ultimately, it all about accuracy. That's why you hire accountants. We need to be very clear about what this function is and it's a function of enforcing accuracy."

Dillingham was more nuanced, countering that both are imperative, that completely accurate books filed years or months late are of little use to departments. The key, she said, is to communicate clearly and train other departments and office staff so everyone is aware of what must be provided when, and what documentation will be required. In response to a follow-up Journal inquiry, Dillingham pointed to prioritizing timeliness, in addition to accuracy, as a central differentiation between her and Paz Dominguez, deeming it "unacceptable" that the fiscal year 2019-2020 audit had yet to be completed.

The 2019-2020 Audit

If you look through the county's external year-end audits posted to the Auditor-Controller's Office website dating back to 2010, you'll notice external auditors repeatedly — year after year — noted the county's failure to reconcile certain account balances in its general ledger, noting it could require significant end-of-year adjustments to county accounts and would make it more difficult for the county to identify potential acts of fraud.

The 2018-2019 single audit report, the first — and to date, the last — of Paz Dominguez's tenure, notes: "There is no disagreement with the audit finding. The auditor-controller is in the process of hiring and training staff who will be tasked with these closing procedures."

But nearly two years after that audit report was signed by the accounting firm CliftonLarsonAllen LLP, the county's year-end financial reporting has seemingly ground to a halt, with the county having yet to close the books on either its 2019-2020 or 2020-2021 fiscal years as it currently budgets for 2022-2023.

In December, Department of Health and Human Services Director Connie Beck publicly expressed concern the outstanding financial reports could jeopardize the more than $61 million in federal funds it depends on to run local programs.

County officials have said the outstanding 2019-2020 single audit has already caused tangible problems. Planning Director John Ford has said it's preventing his department from applying for more than $18 million in state funding. Public Works Director Tom Mattson said the outstanding audit has already resulted in the loss of $674,000 in state funding and put another $200,000 in road maintenance funds on hold, with CalTrans also having informed the county it will withhold all new funding until mandated reports are filed. This news comes as Congress' $715 billion infrastructure package is rolling out.

County Chief Financial Officer Tabitha Miller has also pointed out that discrepancies in county records from the 2018-2019 and 2019-2020 fiscal years amount to $55.6 million, leaving it in a place where the county "truly (does) not know where our fund balance is" as it begins budgeting for 2022-2023.

The issue of the outstanding financial reports came to a head in earnest last month, when the state Attorney General's Office filed a lawsuit against the county and Paz Dominguez personally, alleging the auditor-controller had failed to file the county's adopted budgets for fiscal years 2020-2021 and 2021-2022 with the State Controller's Office, while also failing to file Financial Transaction Reports for 2019-2020 and 2020-2021 "in the time, form and manner prescribed by the State Controller."

To Paz Dominguez's critics, the situation can serve as a case study for her tenure.

According to the lawsuit, the State Controller's Office initially reached out to Paz Dominguez about the 2019-2020 Financial Transaction Report (FTR) in November of 2020, reminding her it was her legal responsibility to file the report by Feb. 1, 2021. The office then reportedly followed up Feb. 26, 2021, advising the report was now delinquent but providing another 20 days to comply, warning that a failure to file could leave Paz Dominguez facing a fine of up to $5,000. The office followed up June 1, 2021, with an email and Paz Dominguez responded, offering to complete the report "using unaudited information” and indicated it would take two weeks to get the document filed, deeming it an “urgent priority.” The State Controller’s Office agreed, but Paz Dominguez never filed the document, according to the lawsuit.

The California Attorney General’s Office then sent a “final demand letter” Feb. 24, giving Paz Dominguez 20 more days to file the report under threat of a lawsuit and the aforementioned fines.

Paz Dominguez responded to the letter by telling the Board of Supervisors on March 1 that she believed it was sent in error, and then delivering the “findings” of her ongoing review of the county’s finances, which included a laundry list of alleged irregularities and deficient fiscal controls that left the county vulnerable to “opportunities for fraud,” as well as a few straight allegations of impropriety. (It should be noted here that while the board urged Paz Dominguez to present evidence of her claims in a subsequent report to the board, she declined to do so, and documents released to date under a California Public Records Act request fail to substantiate the vast majority of her allegations.)

After learning the letter was not, in fact, sent in error, the county and Paz Dominguez mounted an all-hands-on-deck effort to file the outstanding FTR, filing it on the March 16 due date. But the state is alleging that in the section designated to document who specifically prepared the report, Paz Dominguez signed “under direction of the AG” rather than her name. The SCO returned the document, stating it required a first and last name and title of the person who input the data. According to the lawsuit, Paz Dominguez never responded and did not correct the document, prompting the lawsuit.

For her part, Paz Dominguez has said a lot of things have played into problems filing the 2019-2020 financial documents. When the COVID-19 pandemic hit, she says, her staff had already been outfitted with laptops and was prepared to work remotely. But that wasn’t the case across other departments, Paz Dominguez says, explaining they were ill-equipped to deal with the new reality of remote work. This, she says, caused months-long delays in other departments submitting invoices and other financial documents to the Auditor-Controller’s Office, causing a tremendous bottleneck. Currently, she says, outside firms are struggling to complete reconciliations from the 2019-2020 fiscal year, which she says are a product of deficiencies in other departments' reporting, though that's been disputed by Miller and County Administrative Officer Elishia Hayes.

Paz Dominguez's issues with meeting deadlines have extended beyond the year-end financial reports. (It's perhaps worth noting here that Paz Dominguez submitted the questionnaire sent out by the Journal to local candidates eight days after the paper's initial deadline.)

After Paz Dominguez aired the "findings" of her fiscal review at that March 1 meeting of the Board of Supervisors, the board asked her to return March 15 with a full report and underlying evidence, to which Paz Dominguez agreed. But she then failed to complete her report and provide the documents to the clerk of the board in time for that meeting. At the time, Paz Dominguez told the Journal that Clerk of the Board Kathy Hayes had been "very helpful" in scheduling a special March 21 meeting on the issue, adding she herself "made a commitment to the public that I would provide them the relevant information on the 15th and I will keep that promise." Paz Dominguez said she planned to release the report publicly that day. Instead of releasing the report and underlying documentation, she took to the Humboldt County Courthouse steps to announce her re-election bid in a speech that repeated many of the allegations made two weeks earlier.

Asked after the speech when she planned to release the evidence supporting her allegations, which she'd previously said she had at the ready, Paz Dominguez told the Journal it would be released in weekly response to a California Public Records act request filed by one of her campaign supporters. As the Journal went to press May 24 — 10 weeks after the promised release date — the Auditor-Controller's Office had disclosed three batches of records responsive to the request, the last coming on April 8, and the documents released leave the vast majority of her claims unsubstantiated.

Humboldt County Superintendent of Schools Michael Davies-Hughes, meanwhile, tells the Journal local school districts have not received interest apportionment payments, usually dispersed quarterly, from the Auditor-Controller's Office for any all of the 2020-2021 fiscal year or the first three quarters of 2021-2022. Davies-Hughes said a "conservative estimate" would be that the outstanding payments owed local districts combine to total $2.6 million.

'Growing Pains'

Back at the KMUD forum, Paz Dominguez characterized the tumult of her first term in office as a by-product of change.

"This is a growing pain," she said. "This is a time of growth. We are going to prioritize accuracy because we are correcting a culture, an entrenched culture of just getting things done regardless of accuracy."

In response to questions posed by the Journal, Paz Dominguez characterized the current state of the county's fiscal controls as "evolving" and "strengthening," noting the board's adoption of a cash handling policy and formation of an Audit Committee as signs "the tone at the top of the organization is shifting toward one of promoting strong internal controls." She pointed to staffing as an ongoing limiting factor for the office — it currently is budgeted for 14 employees, up from 11 before Paz Dominguez took office — but said she will look to increase automation where possible, and turn to recording video trainings for other departments to save time.

Dillingham agreed staffing is a significant issue, saying she would look to bring on interns from Cal Poly Humboldt in an effort to ease the workload, while putting an emphasis on recruitment and retention efforts. But Dillingham also intoned she believes staff time can be saved by working on strengthening internal controls to prevent reporting deficiencies rather than rectifying them after the fact. She also referenced the words of a mentor, who once told her, "The difference between being a bookkeeper and an accountant is knowing when to stop looking for pennies."

In preparing its election coverage, the Journal asked both candidates to fill out a questionnaire to give readers insight into everything from their backgrounds and plans on the office to their personalities. As a part of that, we asked both candidates to sum up their candidacy in a single haiku.

Here's how they responded:

Paz Dominguez:
"The truth is easy
When challenged, be like water
And wash off mistrust"

Dillingham:
"Cheryl Dillingham
for Auditor-Controller
on time no drama"

Arcada Gets Back in the Game

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

The orange and black pixelated sign for Arcada (660 K St., Arcata), reminiscent of Space Invaders, hung as a question for the past two years. The retro arcade bar for grownups opened in the last week in February of 2020 only to shut down two and a half weeks later when Public Health declared a shelter-in-place order in response to COVID-19. To pass the lavender building that once housed the Other Place was to be reminded of thwarted plans and nostalgia for old times — whether the 1980s or just three years ago, when we couldn't imagine hanging out with friends or strangers for a beer and a couple rounds of pinball could ever be fraught.

Kristen “P-Nut” Thompson and her wife Amber Saba, who also co-own Slice of Humboldt Pie, reopened Arcada May 10 after a little more than two years closed. The virus that shuttered the place is still with us, making their mission of low-key escapism more of a challenge. Still, Thompson says, “We want you to come and be a kid for a moment and not have to worry about everything. Be 12.”

“They would not let this place be open for a very long time, which I totally understand,” says Thompson of the restrictions on bars and restaurants over the course of the pandemic thus far. She adds that, truth be told, she and Saba weren't ready, either. They'd pared down to themselves and one other staffer at the pie business, which has a patio they were able to seat customers in once outdoor dining was allowed. “We really took it step by step in terms of our comfort and our employees,” says Thompson. Takeout sales, selling pies and empanadas at Eureka Natural Foods and other restaurants, along with Payroll Protection Plan loans kept Slice of Humboldt Pie running and even allowed Thompson and Saba to gradually add more staff.

But Slice of Humboldt Pie, which they started in 2013, required their full attention and takeout sales from the bar menu at Arcada weren't worth keeping it open. So they shut it down, using the kitchen for dispersed prep work, and waited.

Inside, under a black tin ceiling, the walls are crowded with arcade games housed in vintage cabinets, most with drink stands beside them to hold your choice from among the eight beers on tap and a wide breadth of cans that includes 11 beers, a half dozen ciders, another half dozen wines, and an array of sodas, coffees and hard seltzers. Churning away above the bar on the right are a pair of slushie machines, one with frozen sangria and one with classic blue raspberry, “So you can get the blue tongue,” says Thompson.

The filling for the Humboldt Grass-fed beef sloppy Joe empanada a few blocks away at Bittersweet shows up on the Arcada menu as a full sandwich on house baked bread with a side of fries. Fans of the pulled pork green chili empanadas will be happy to see the filling, cooked in Arcada’s kitchen in great vats, can be ordered on nachos, beer-battered fries, Tater Tots or anything you think to smother in it. “Pretend you’re 12 and you have all the nacho cheese and Tater Tots and you can put on whatever you want,” suggests Thompson with a mischievous giggle.

It feels equally regressive to order boneless wings, but Saba’s classic Buffalo hot wing sauce clinging to the well-crust dark meat morsels (actual wing meat, mind you, not chicken particle board) is sharp in tang, rounded with butter and hot enough to move your makeup a little. Dipping sauces are from scratch, too, which makes the ranch, bleu cheese or cumin lime dressings greater than their side billing. Look into the avocado sauce and homemade cheese sauce, as well, keeping Thompson’s hedonistic topping advice in mind.

Arcada grew out of Saba and Thompson’s love of games — video and pinball — and the arcade bars and pubs they seek out when traveling. “Our days are hard and stressful just like everyone else,” says Thompson, and “when you go to these places, you can just not think about all that and you can just go and be a kid.” While Arcada is 21 and over, its owners, who have two kids themselves, are sympathetic to the plight of parents with joystick-happy youngsters. Eventually, they may host the occasional family night.

The pair is always on the hunt for new acquisitions, too, as they own rather than rent each piece. (Give them a shout if you come across a Crystal Castles or a real Dragons Lair.) “We have sourced those cabinets and all the games. We are up in the games, fixing them ourselves,” says Thompson, noting the pinball games — Houdini, The Munsters and Jurassic Park — are newer models that are a little easier on the upkeep. Thompson’s personal favorite Centipede is housed in a vintage cabinet with original coin slots and a built-in ashtray. Ghosts and Goblins is Saba’s jam, featuring a knight who starts his quest in his skivvies and must collect armor and weapons to rescue a princess.

“It’s what we like,” says Thompson. “You want everybody else to enjoy them but you gravitate to what you like. It’s fun being a kid.” ●

Sea to Summit: A Return to Salmon Mountain

By Hollie Ernest

While I was rushing to complete the Sea-to-Summit challenge in 2020, cycling and hiking from the ocean to mountain tops around Humboldt before weather and wildfires thwarted my plans, my friend Kelly was also pursuing all 10 peaks of the series ("Sea to Summit Part 1: Bald Mountain," April 22, 2021). Unfortunately, she didn't get to Salmon Mountain before the Red Cap Fire made access impossible. This uncompleted peak nagged the back of her mind through the winter of 2020. Kelly is a pharmacist, a busy lady with important responsibilities. She oversees large hospital networks that I pretend to wrap my head around but don't completely understand. In all fairness, she is usually explaining her job to me while we are pedaling up steep hills. She loves — loves — to ride uphill on her bike. More than riding downhill, if you can believe it.

Come spring of 2021, I told her I was up for driving a support vehicle with camping gear, if she still wanted to pursue the Salmon Mountain ascent. We could do it over two days. Like many of us, she'd had a rough year on several levels and really wanted to complete this challenge. Plus, I was excited to play cheerleader. On our chosen Saturday, May 1, Kelly picked me from McKinleyville in her truck, her long brown braid swept to the side of her wide grin. At the last minute, I grabbed snowshoes and ski pants from my garage, saying "I don't think we'll need these, but just in case!" Then we drove to Freshwater Lagoon, strategizing en route about when and where we would meet up later in the land of no cell service. She'd be taking Bald Hills Road, then follow State Route 96 to Orleans, then Red Cap Road to the Salmon Mountain trailhead and, finally, up to the peak, at 6,962 feet.

Dropping her off in the misting fog and crashing waves felt like dropping a kid off at school. Even though she is an accomplished cyclist, I told her, "Be careful! Do you have enough water? And snacks?" Kelly always has enough water and snacks. I am the fool who occasionally runs out. She was grasping and fidgeting with her handlebars like a racehorse waiting for the gate to open, then she was off.

While she pedaled east up and over the Bald Hills through Yurok ancestral territory, I drove back south to meet some friends at Stone Lagoon to swim. The wind picked up and we swam against roiling waves. We felt like pirates on the high seas and enjoyed the hell out of the tailwind on the return swim. After that mermaid session, I cranked the heat in the truck and set out to find my cycling friend. Bald Hills Road was still so socked in by fog I could barely see the outline of the lupines lining the road and the eerie oaks in the distance.

I didn't catch up to Kelly until State Route 96, where she was cruising through Karuk land. Riding from Orick to Orleans, what most consider a big effort, was like a warm-up to her. We stopped and chatted, but she didn't need anything. The sun found us, and the robust winds whirled the maple leaves and blossoms until they looked like they were hula-hooping. From State Route 96, you take a right on Red Cap Road, and it's a long and arduous climb on a bicycle to the Salmon Mountain trailhead, where we hoped to camp.

I drove ahead to scout our potential camp spot but a mile or so before the trailhead, thick snow piled on the road. I have always considered myself a cautious person, though not everyone (like my mom) agrees with that assessment. I didn't want to get my friend's truck stuck, or worse, careen off the cliff. Well, shoot. Good thing I brought the snowshoes. I left a note on the truck that read: "Be right back." Would we be able to summit after all? I had to find out.

The hike on the road was doable enough, with some areas covered with deep snow and others with none at all. We could at least access the trail and, from what I could see, it looked passable until close to the top, which was blanketed in white. It would be a 10-mile round-trip hike the next day and the fir trees, manzanita and madrone were almost unrecognizable in the fresh powder.

We crossed paths again and Kelly cycled to where the snow started, while I sought a decent camp spot lower down. I pampered her with potato chips, water and beer, and she was so appreciative she just kept smiling. We laughed at our multisport adventure — the snowshoes crammed in between a drying wetsuit, bike helmets, tents and clothes. The truck was a mess and we were delighted.

The next day, we woke up to sunshine and parked where she had left off cycling the previous day. With snowshoes secured, we went for it. The trail became harder to find the closer we got to the top. Digging the spikes into vertical white walls and using our hands, we went straight up. The views from the top brought tears to both of our eyes. We gazed at the Trinity Alps, the Marble Mountains, Etna Summit and Thompson Peak. I was proud of Kelly and her tenacity, and the hurdles she had overcome in the past year. We sang Lizzo: "I'm 100 percent that bitch, even when I'm crying crazy."

Those white peaks gave us a little bit of hope after such uncertain and tumultuous 18 months. Maybe this meant the wildfires wouldn't be as severe or maybe the water table could actually recharge. The return trip was borderline terrifying as we slipped and slid down the mountain. The drive home felt long and short, as we discussed life, love and the pursuit of happiness. For us, happiness was on a 6,000-foot snowy peak but maybe it was elsewhere for others. Either way, we hoped more people got to see that view, with or without snow. The golden afternoon light glared through the windshield and we couldn't believe the snowy magic, fickle wind and ocean-to-mountain scenery of the past 48 hours.

Eureka Boats Back on the Salmon after Break in the Wind

By Kenny Priest
fishing@northcoastjournal.com

After sitting on the sidelines for four days, the weather finally cooperated Monday and the Eureka boats were back on the water looking for kings. Salmon have been easy to come by this brief season and Monday proved no different. Quick limits were reported by the handful of boats. “The best bite was straight out front in 280 feet of water,” said Tim Klassen of Reel Steel Sport Fishing, who had full limits by 9:30 a.m. “The water was clear and the fish were coming shallow, right around 60 feet. There’s still some krill in the area as well as sardines. The fish are a decent size, with most around 24 inches and up with the occasional bigger one in the high teens.”

Offshore conditions are looking good through Saturday for the holiday weekend but be aware of the minus tides that will begin Saturday. Sunday and Monday are the most dangerous as nearly 8 feet of water will be leaving the bay down to a minus 1-foot low when boats will be heading through the jaws.

Weekend marine forecast

After Wednesday, the north winds will begin to subside and the first part of the weekend is looking fishable. Friday, winds will be out of the northwest up to 5 knots and west waves 4 feet at eight seconds. Saturday is looking a little rougher with west winds 10 to 15 knots and waves northwest 6 feet at nine seconds. Sunday, the wind will pick up and come out of the north 10 to 20 knots with west waves 8 feet at 10 seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com. To monitor the latest Humboldt bar conditions, visit www.wr.noaa.gov/eka/swan. You can also call the National Weather Service office at 443-7062 or the office on Woodley Island at 443-6484.

The Oceans:

Eureka

It’s kind of been the same story on the salmon, 200 to 300 feet of water straight out front of Eureka, reports Tony Sepulveda of Shellback Sport Fishing. “Sardines and krill are holding the salmon in the area,” said Sepulveda. “Most mornings they start out shallow, 40 feet on the wire and biting deep sixes. As the day goes on, they head to the bottom. If you still need fish at noon, 200 feet on the wire is the ticket. We’ve had limits every day we fished them. Some days they come fast, others we’ve had to work at a little. But they always seem to come.” The Pacific halibut bite has been a little challenging due to the hoards of small trash fish, reports Sepulveda. “There’s definitely still some nice fish to be caught though for those willing to put in the time.”

Trinidad

The rockfish bite in Trinidad continues to be excellent and you don’t need to travel far. Capt. Curt Wilson of Wind Rose Charters reports a red-hot bite right out front of Trinidad. “We’ve been staying close, right in front of Flat Iron and finding all the black rockfish we need,” said Wilson. “The crabbing is really good and they’re in great shape.” Ocean conditions look fishable for the week out of Trinidad, especially if you’re looking to fish half days.

Crescent City

The salmon bite continues to sizzle out of Crescent City, reports Britt Carson of Crescent City’s Englund Marine. He said, “Just about all the boats that went out Tuesday came back with limits. Most are starting around the red can towards South Reef and the Sisters. The fish are still shallow and watermelon Apexes and Cut Plugs are two of the top baits. The rockfish is still excellent, too, with both reefs and the Sisters producing limits of rockfish and lings. There hasn’t been much effort on Pacific halibut but that will likely change once salmon closes after next Tuesday.

Brookings

Lingcod and rockfish action was good last week and over the weekend out of Brookings, despite windy weather, reports Andy Martin of Brookings Fishing Charters. “Big schools of fish are just outside the harbor, feeding on anchovies and herring near Chetco Point and the entrance buoys,” said Martin. “Wind chop has limited the opportunity to venture offshore for halibut, but calmer conditions are expected later this week. Salmon season opens June 18 for hatchery coho and June 25 for kings.”

How we grow matters

Laugh It Up

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

I'm happy to report I finished last week with a show that absolutely repaired my mood and gave me just enough oomph to get back to the working week. I am, of course, talking about the Eureka Symphony's amazing season finale. I will be brief because there is new business at hand, but two things: First, if you see Jenny Scheinman's name on the lineup, buy a ticket immediately, regardless of what you know about the show because you will never be disappointed; secondly, I can't wait for next season. If you get a chance to go to a performance by our beloved local symphony, take it. You can thank me later. Kudos to everyone involved.

Moving on, we're back on track for the Grand Kinetic Championship. Given the ongoing pandemic, I have mixed feelings about this event but I concede that there's literally nothing to be done. Those who choose to take precautions and those who don't are firmly encamped, each side fully convinced of their own righteousness. My only observation is that a country stupid enough to turn a public health crisis into a culture war isn't going to ever get better without a fundamental reconstruction. The reins have been loose for a long time, the coachman's drunk and I can hear a horde of bandits picking up the scattered coins dropping out of the shot-up lockbox. Let those among us with reason retain their sanity by losing that reason and replacing it with absurdist humor. Rather than looking with stark horror and the slithering destruction of collective normalcy, let's embrace the madcap and absurd and laugh at how hideous the ride has always been. In that sense, we are better equipped for the artful weirdness of this weekend's Kinetic spectacle than ever before. And no matter how you feel about the future, you had better enjoy today. Be seeing you.

Thursday

Barbaro is a Minnesota quartet whose sound can perhaps best be described as "chamber grass." This means it plays intricate, bluegrass-flavored songs with the complexity and sonic qualities of chamber music and cool-era jazz. If that description either appeals to you or leaves something to be desired, you can judge for yourself tonight at the Arcata Playhouse at 8 p.m. ($18). Perhaps there's a better genre name for this excellent band and you might be the one to discover it.

Friday

It's always a treat to write about a venue I haven't covered before. At least not to my recollection, which is admittedly slipping a lot these days as the "new normal" steadily grinds away the dura mater of my brain. At any rate, Forever Found is the place I am referring to and the show is a good one for all you reggae fans out there. Dezarie is a talented chanteuse from the Virgin Islands who dabbles in a soulful modern form of that great rhythmic genre. I hear her band is top notch, too. The all-ages show is at 8 p.m. and there is a byzantine pricing model: $45 general admission, $40 advance, $35 early bird, $25 super early bird, $10 kids 12 and under.

Saturday

It's the last Saturday of May and another hip hop night at the Arcata Theatre Lounge is on tonight's program. Brother Ali is something of an unusual figure in the hip hop world: A young convert to Islam, the Wisconsin-born rapper encountered early outsider treatment because of his albinism, an experience that has informed his spiritual and creative life, fostering a love for activism and social justice. He is joined tonight by local rap collective City Hippie, as well as DJ Last Word and Rowdy. Doors at 7 p.m. ($24, $20 advance).

Barbaro plays the Arcata Playhouse on Thursday, May 26 at 8 p.m.

Sunday

There was a time when people referred to the mix of rockabilly with modern punk as "psychobilly," but I have seen that term thrown around less and less in the last decade. No big loss; I'm not much of a fan of kitschy genre names. Regardless, if your ears prick up at the sound of those styles mixed together, the Siren's Song Tavern has a show for you. The Rocketz are some Los Angeles veterans of the cool cats club, while Motel Drive hails from Fresno and has a bit more country twang in the mix. Tonight's lucky number is eight, as in "time of the show and number of dollars needed to get inside."

Monday, Memorial Day

It's the last day of the long weekend which means that from Crab Park to downtown Ferndale the Kinetic madness will be in full swing during the sunshine hours. If you find you've had your fill of both sun and fun, and need to hide out somewhere and top off the tank, consider heading over to the nearby Angelina Inn, where Buddy Reed and th' Rip It Ups will be playing the blues starting at 5 p.m. The music is free, the pizza is not.

Tuesday

It's easy to do a double-take tonight because the wide world of music has more than one guy named Mike Love. Thankfully, tonight's visitor isn't the more

(in)famous one, known as the Republican Beach Boy, who tours the country with the worst iteration of that foundational group and is largely hated by better musicians and discerning fans alike. No, I'm talking about Hawaiian reggae artists Mike Love & The Full Circle, a group that trades in genuine Good Vibrations and not the saccharine type. Catch the action at the Arcata Theatre Lounge tonight at 8 p.m. Acclaimed French group Dub Inc is on the marquee as well ($20).

Wednesday

Over Yonder has made a name for itself by peddling a righteous mix of intricate noodling with funky beats and heavy riffs. Sometimes known as The Primus Equation, Portland trio Sweet N' Juicy has a similar formula, albeit with fewer musicians and the addition of three fruit-themed costumes. So, if you choose to visit the Siren's Song Tavern tonight at 8 p.m., you won't just be listening to funky party music, you'll be listening to funky party music performed by a pineapple, a banana and a strawberry on keys (price unknown). Shake it up.

Collin Yeo (he/him) would like to wish the fondest of farewells to an old furry friend of his in New Orleans. Rest in peace, Pyg. You were one of the sweetest cats I ever knew. Until we meet again, dear one.

Inching back toward “normal” for Humboldt includes giant mushrooms, spaceships and mythical animals rolling through town and into the bay. At last, after a COVID hiatus, the Kinetic Grand Championship returns in-person and out of control from May 28-30. The three-day, 42-mile, human-powered kinetic sculpture race for the glory over roads, sand and sea starts on the Arcata Plaza on Saturday, May 28, where you can see the wild rides before the noon start and the push to Dead Man’s Drop on the dunes. (Bring bug repellent.) The next day, Sunday, May 29, is a splashy event on the Eureka waterfront, with the amphibious wonders hitting the waves. Finally, on Monday, May 30, head for the finish line on Ferndale’s Main Street. Visit www.kineticgrandchampionship.com for details and glorious updates.

Ferndale Memorial Day parade. YouTube

It’s a long weekend for remembrance, starting with the 27th annual Trinidad Memorial Ceremony on Sunday, May 29 at 2 p.m. at Trinidad Memorial Park (free). Pay tribute to those lost or buried at sea by the Memorial Wall with bagpipe music, Samantha Day singing “Amazing Grace,” speakers, U.S. Coast Guard helicopter flyover and “Taps.” On Monday, May 30, a Memorial Day Celebration marches along Ferndale Main Street at 10 a.m., followed by a ceremony at the Ferndale Cemetery and a return parade to the Veterans Memorial Building.

Shutterstock

Get down to get upcycled at the Trash Fashion Show on Saturday, May 28 at 7 p.m. at the Arcata Playhouse. Apprentice Entertainment is hosting a runway show, lobby art exhibition, poetry, dancing, food and photos. Show up at 6:30 p.m. if you want to create some scrappy sculpture, then strut the catwalk in your best Oscar de la Grouch couture or golf clap from the audience with the rest of the beautiful people ($5, no one turned away).

Enrich yourself at Synopsis on Saturday, May 28 at 5:30 p.m. at Only Skin Deep: An Evening of Art, Poetry and Dance ($5-$20). Clink glasses at a cocktail hour and settle in for an immersive couple of hours of spoken word and dance celebrating voices of local artists of Indigenous, Pan African, Latinx, Asian and mixed heritage. See it in-person or livestream wherever you are.

Heads up, Humboldt: While the county’s masking mandate has been lifted, Public Health is still strongly recommending masking indoors in public, social distancing and “avoiding crowds and poorly ventilated spaces.” COVID-19 is still with us, so be sure to check the protocols at event venues.

George Carlin's American Dream

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

GEORGE CARLIN'S AMERICAN DREAM. Given his insistence on examining words and everything else in context, it would be disrespectful to talk about the comedic life and legacy of George Carlin without noting the moment in which the HBO documentary about him debuts. OK, wait — there's too much. Let's just look at comedy. Last week, comic John Mulaney surprised his audience in Ohio by bringing out recent NIMBY convert Dave Chappelle, who reportedly leaned into his transphobic period, as his opening act. Then Ricky Gervais dropped a competitively anti-trans bit. Before they respond to the backlash by declaring themselves sacred vessels of free speech and decrying "cancel culture," all three of these men (none of whom seem to be struggling for gigs in the wake of previous personal and professional criticism) would do well to watch the two-part documentary on Carlin directed by Judd Apatow and Michael Bonfiglio. Though it's unlikely they'll see how making transgender people, who are already subject to discrimination and violence, the butt of their jokes looks in comparison to punching up at church, state and corporate power. Nor is it likely seeing another comic arrested for obscenity or at the center of a U.S. Supreme Court case about regulation of indecent speech will show them that the "censorship" they believe themselves to be suffering at the hands of the "woke mob" is merely dispersed booing. But Carlin offers a vital example for comedians in his willingness to challenge himself, not just his audience.

George Carlin's American Dream draws on interviews with family and comedians (W. Kamau Bell, Jon Stewart, Chris Rock, Patton Oswalt, Bette Midler and others) archival footage, performance clips, old home audio, as well as an abundance of the comedian's notes, enlivened by animation of his scribbles and annotations. Carlin's delightfully foul-mouthed brother Patrick helps flesh out his childhood, including their mother's escape from their violent, alcoholic father, growing up with other Irish American Catholic kids in Morningside Heights and swimming in the filthy Hudson River. We learn how George came by his distrust of authority (Catholic school and the U.S. Air Force) and got into radio, teaming up with Jack Burns. We meet his first wife and greatest booster Brenda via old interviews and letters home describing touring coffee-houses flat broke before landing steady work on TV variety shows, doing ostensibly wholesome comic skits in a suit and tie. When that façade became unbearable, things get interesting and Carlin starts working as his authentic self, turning his analytical mind toward the war in Vietnam, the Civil Rights movement and the intergenerational upheaval of the times. Stephen Colbert comments that Carlin's transformation from straight-laced jokes to counter-culture commentary is something like the Beatles going from "Love Me Do" to The White Album (dropping acid, it turns out, was involved in both). It's not Carlin's last evolution, either, and we see him go from a firebrand tackling birth control, war and drugs on Flip Wilson's record label to tame observational word games before realizing he has to push himself to find his voice again. And yes, we hear a lot of the seven words you can't say on TV.

There are setbacks and comebacks and enough cocaine to make one marvel at his making it to 2008 before his fatal heart attack. Brenda, too, struggles with substance abuse as an alcoholic and cocaine user. And there are scenes of the couple talking both honestly and dishonestly about their addictions and the damage it did to their lives, the latter echoed in interview with their daughter Kelly Carlin. The family's emergence from this grim and terrifying era is told with George and Brenda's love story as its central thread and its happy ending, at least until Brenda's death.

That Carlin is still so steadily referenced now on social media and elsewhere is testimony both to his keen insights and our country's continued infatuation with drugs (legal and otherwise), "bombing brown people," capitalism, corporate power over government, police brutality, guns, the hypocrisy of the founding fathers and organized religion. Carlin's late material, having taken a disturbingly dark and misanthropic (OK, more misanthropic) turn after Brenda's death can be hard to hear, as he pretends (?) glee at disaster and death, and tells Charlie Rose he has opted to no longer emotionally invest in how things turn out for the world and its people. Whether it was a cathartic release of rage or true surrender to hopelessness is open to speculation.

But again, context: As I typed this review, news broke that an 18-year-old gunman in Uvalde, Texas, killed 18 children and three adults. Only 10 days ago, an 18-year-old racist white gunman killed 10 Black people at a market in Buffalo, New York. It feels, in the wake of this particularly American horror, repeated again and again and spurring no meaningful action from our leadership, a monumental act of willful optimism that Carlin called out while bidding his audience goodnight, "Take care of yourself. And take care of somebody else." It's unlikely but worth asking for. TVMA. 215M. HBO MAX. ●

A Paean to Lefties

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Cuevas de las Manos in Santa Cruz Province, Argentina. About 96 percent of the unambiguous prints are stencils of left hands, meaning the right hand was used to hold the spray pipe.

They squint, they stammer, they shuffle and shamle, they flounder around like seals out of water. Awkward in the house and clumsy in their games, they are fumbler and bunglers at whatever they do. — Sir Cyril Burt, The Backward Child, 1937

Since Sir Cyril Burt, one-time president of the British Psychological Society and notorious charlatan (for faking studies of twins), sure had it in for lefties. That's whom he was referring to above and his harsh opinion was still current when I went to school: Left-handed kids in my British 1950s classrooms were forced to write with their right hands. Antipathy toward-left-handers is at least as old as the Roman Empire — we get our word “sinister” from Latin for left, while Latin “dexter,” right, gives us dexterous. Other languages follow right along, as it were, with general nastiness toward left-handers: In Italian, mancino means both “left” and “maimed”; Portuguese left, canhoto, is also “weak”; and in Arabic, simal means both “left hand” and “bad omen.” I discussed this in a previous column (“The Right Stuff,” May 28, 2009). Since then, I've come up with a few more tidbits about left-handers:

- An analysis of more than 2 million people worldwide reported that between 9 percent and 18 percent were lefties, depending on how handedness was measured. The figure of 10 percent is often cited as a rule of thumb.
- In another study, males were found to be 23 percent more likely than females to be left-handed.

• The Cueva de las Manos (Cave of Hands) in Patagonia has more than 2,000 handprints stenciled on its walls, created between 7300 B.C. and 700 A.D., achieved by blowing soot or ochre powder from the mouth through a bone pipe. Of the unambiguous ones, 829 are left hands and 31 right hands. Assuming they were holding the pipe with their (dominant) right hand, it seems fewer than 4 percent of these artists were left-handed.

- Left-handedness is somewhat genetic. For instance, if both parents of a child are left-handed, the kid has a 26 percent chance of also being left-handed. It was once thought that a single gene determined your handedness but now it's thought that at least 40 genes are implicated.

- Female dogs, horses and domestic cats tend to favor their right limbs; vice versa for males.
- Kangaroos are mostly “left-handed.” About two-thirds of chimps favor right-handedness, as do about three-quarters of gorillas. Their orangutan cousins are mostly lefties.

• U.S. presidents buck the 10 percent rule. Lefties include James Garfield (who was actually ambidextrous), Gerald Ford, George H.W. Bush, Bill Clinton and Barack Obama. Harry Truman and Ronald Reagan were left-handed, although they wrote with their right hands.

• A popular but false myth has it that lefties die earlier than right-handed folk. A large 2019 U.K. study showed no difference in mortality.

• Left-handers are over-represented in many sports. Right-handed batters facing leftie pitchers don't have as much experience with southpaws as southpaws have had with them. Likewise in boxing, fencing and other mano a mano sports. (Regarding the term “southpaw”: Most baseball diamonds have pitchers facing west, to avoid having batters being blinded by the afternoon sun, so their pitching arms are toward the south.)

• Finally, why are most of us right-handed? I've just spent a few hours reading the literature on your behalf (big bucks, you know) and I can report: Theories abound and no one really knows. ●

Barry Evans (he/him, barryevans@yahoo.com) once had an unhappy experience with a left-handed corkscrew.

DATED: MAY 20, 2022. Kelly Sanders, Registrar of Voters, prepared by Natassia Harrison, Deputy 5/12/22

NOTICE OF PROPERTY TAX DELINQUENCY AND IMPENDING DEFAULT

Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3351, 3352

I, Amy Christensen, Interim Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify as follows:
That at close of business on June 30, 2022, by operation of law, any real property (unless previously tax-defaulted and not redeemed) that have any delinquent taxes, assessments, or other charges levied for the fiscal year 2021-22, and/or any delinquent supplemental taxes levied prior to the fiscal year 2021-22 shall be declared tax-defaulted.
That unless the tax defaulted property is completely redeemed through payment of all unpaid amounts, together with penalties and fees prescribed by law or an installment plan is initiated and maintained; the property may be sold subsequently at a tax sale to satisfy the tax lien.
That a detailed list of all properties remaining tax-defaulted at the close of business on June 30, 2022, and not redeemed prior to being submitted for publication, shall be published on or before September 8, 2022.
That information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by Amy Christensen, Interim-Humboldt County Tax Collector at 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, California 95501 (707)476-2450.
I certify or (declare), under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

Amy Christensen
Interim-Humboldt County Tax Collector

Executed at Eureka, Humboldt County, California, on May 20th, 2022. Published in the North Coast Journal on May 26th, June 2nd, and June 9th, 2022.

NOTICE OF IMPENDING POWER TO SELL
TAX-DEFAULTED PROPERTY

Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3361, 3362

Pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code 3691 and 3692.4, the following conditions will, by operation of law, subject real property to the Tax Collector's power to sell.

- 1) All property for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for five or more years.
Note: The power to sell schedule for nonresidential commercial property is three or more years of tax-defaulted status, unless the county adopts, by ordinance or resolution, the five-year tax default schedule.
- 2) All property that has a nuisance abatement lien recorded against it and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.
- 3) Any property that has been identified and requested for purchase by a city, county, city and county or nonprofit organization to serve the public benefit by providing housing or services directly related to low-income persons and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.
- The parcels listed herein meet one or more of the criteria listed above and thus, will become subject to the Tax Collector's power to sell on July 1, 2022, at 12:01 a.m., by operation of law. The Tax Collector's power to sell will arise unless the property is either redeemed or made subject to an installment plan of redemption initiated as provided by law prior to close of business on the last business day in June. The right to an installment plan terminates on the last business day in June, and after that date the entire balance due must be paid in full to prevent sale of the property at public auction.
- The right of redemption survives the property becoming subject to the power to sell, but it terminates at close of business on the last business day prior to the date of the sale by the Tax Collector.

All information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption will be furnished, upon request, by Amy Christensen, Interim- Humboldt County Tax Collector, 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, CA 95501, (707)476-2450.

The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of June 2022, is shown opposite the assessment/parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

Free Will Astrology

Week of May 26, 2022

By Rob Brezsný

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In defining the essential elements at play in a typical Aries person's agenda, I'm not inclined to invoke the words "sometimes" or "maybe." Nor do I make frequent use of the words "periodically," "if," or "ordinarily." Instead, my primary identifying term for many Aries characters is "NOW!!!!" with three exclamation points. In referring to your sign's experiences, I also rely heavily on the following descriptors: pronto, presto, push, directly, why not?, engage, declare, activate, venture into, enterprising, seize, deliver, and wield. You are authorized to fully activate and deploy these qualities in the next three weeks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): I like Joan Didion's definitions of self-respect. As you enter a favorable phase for deepening and enhancing your self-respect, they may be helpful. Didion said self-respect is a "sense of one's intrinsic worth," and added, "People who respect themselves are willing to accept the risk that the venture will go bankrupt, that the liaison may not turn out to be one in which every day is a holiday. They are willing to invest something of themselves." And maybe the most essential thing about self-respect, according to Didion, is that it is "a discipline, a habit of mind that can never be faked but can be developed, trained, coaxed forth."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): "Reality is not simply there; it does not simply exist," claimed author Paul Celan. "It must be sought out and won." I think that is excellent advice for you right now. But what does it mean in practical terms? How can you seek out and win reality? My first suggestion is to put your personal stamp on every situation you encounter. Do something subtle or strong to make each event serve your specific interests and goals. My second suggestion is to discern the illusions that other people are projecting and avoid buying into those misunderstandings. My third suggestion is to act as if it's always possible to make life richer, more vivid, and more meaningful. And then figure out how to do that.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Wilma Mankiller was the first female Principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation. She said, "The cow runs away from the storm, while the buffalo charges directly toward it—and gets through it quicker." Political analyst Donna Brazile expounded on Mankiller's strategy: "Whenever I'm confronted with a tough challenge, I do not prolong the torment. I become the buffalo." I recommend Mankiller's and Brazile's approach for you and me in the coming days, my fellow Cancerian. Now please excuse me as I race in the direction of the squall I see brewing in the distance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The New Yorker is an influential Pulitzer Prize-winning magazine that features witty writing and impeccable fact-checking. In 2017, its stories exposed the extensive sexual misconduct committed by movie mogul Harvey Weinstein—and helped lead to his prosecution. How did the magazine get its start? It was co-founded in 1925 by Harold Ross, who had dropped out of school at age 13. He edited every issue for the next 26 years. I'm sensing the possibility of a comparable development in your life, Leo. In the coming months, you may get involved in a project that seems to be beyond the reach of your official capacities or formal credentials. I urge you to proceed as if you can and will succeed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Virgo-born Jocko Willink is a retired naval officer and author. In his book Discipline Equals Freedom: Field Manual, he lays down his manifesto: "Become the discipline—embrace its cold and relentless power. And it will make you better and stronger and smarter and faster and healthier than anything else. And most important: It will make you free." While I don't expect you to embrace Willink's rigorous ethic with the same fanatical grip, I think you will benefit from doing the best you can. The cosmic rhythms will support you if you make a fun and earnest effort to cultivate liberation through discipline.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): "Some nights you are the lighthouse, some nights the sea," writes Libran author Ocean Vuong. According to my astrological analysis, you are better suited to be the lighthouse than the sea in the coming days. Lately, you have thoroughly embodied the sea, and that has prepared you well to provide illumination. You have learned new secrets about the tides and the waves. You are attuned to the rhythms of the undercurrents. So I hope you will now embrace your role as a beacon, Libra. I expect that people will look to your radiance to guide and inspire them.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): "Movie people are possessed by demons, but a very low form of demons," observes author Edna O'Brien. She should know. She has hung out with many big film stars. Since you're probably not in the movie business yourself, your demons may be much higher quality than those of celebrity actors and directors. And I'm guessing that in the coming weeks, your demons will become even finer and more interesting than ever before—even to the point that they could become helpers and advisors. For the best results, treat them with respect and be willing to listen to their ideas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): I'm all in favor of you getting what you yearn for. I have no inhibitions or caveats as I urge you to unleash all your ingenuity and hard work in quest of your beautiful goals. And in the hope of inspiring you to upgrade your ability to fulfill these sacred prospects, I offer you a tip from Sagittarian author Martha Beck. She wrote, "To attract something that you want, become as joyful as you think that thing would make you."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): According to author Caroline Myss, "You should see everything about your life as a lesson." Whoa! Really? Each trip to the grocery store should be a learning opportunity? Myss says yes! For example, let's say you're in the snack foods aisle and you're tempted to put Doritos Nacho Cheese Tortilla Chips and Lay's Barbecue Potato Chips in your cart. But your gut is screaming at you, "That stuff isn't healthy for you!" And yet you decide to ignore your gut's advice. You buy and eat both bags. Myss would say you have squandered a learning opportunity: "You've harmed yourself by blocking your intuitive voice," she writes. Now, in accordance with astrological omens, Capricorn, here's your homework assignment: Regard every upcoming event as a chance to learn how to trust your intuition better.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An Aquarian poet was disturbed when a suitor told her, "I'm really very fond of you." She responded, "I don't like fond. It sounds like something you would tell a dog. Give me love, or nothing. Throw your fond in a pond." I don't advise you to adopt a similar attitude anytime soon, Aquarius. In my oracular opinion, you should wholeheartedly welcome fondness. You should honor it and celebrate it. In itself, it is a rich, complex attitude. And it may also lead, if you welcome it, to even more complex and profound interweavings.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): "I need a playlist of all the songs I used to love but forgot about," wrote Tumblr blogger Yuyuyuyuu. I think you could use such a playlist, too, Pisces. In fact, I would love to see you receive a host of memos that remind you of all the things you love and need and are interested in—but have forgotten about or neglected. The coming weeks will be an excellent time to recover what has been lost. I hope you will re-establish connections and restore past glories that deserve to accompany you into the future. ●

DOZENS OF TEAMS FROM ALL OVER THE USA WILL BRAVE 50 MILES OF HUMBOLDT COUNTY'S BAY, ROADS, BEACHES, DUNES, TRAILS, HILLS, RIVERS AND TOWNS. RACERS COMPETE FOR TROPHIES IN ART, ENGINEERING AND SPEED IN THE HOPES THAT THEY WILL BE THE 2022 KINETIC GRAND CHAMPIONS!

Up and Down Table Bluff

As early as 1:30 p.m. to 7:07 p.m.

From early afternoon until course close at 7:07 p.m. teams will huff and puff up Table Bluff on Eel River Road, then pray their way down the other side. Known in Kinetics as "Melvin's Mile," this is your last chance to see Kinetic Sculptures on the course for the day. Park on the opposite side of the road from the teams and give them some much needed GLORY!

Table Bluff - This place has multiple names, in Soulatluk, which shows its historical significance, including: Rraloughugu'w, said to mean 'road goes over [the hill]' and Tvutgugu'w which refers to either the bluff itself or the Old Reservation. *

* The Kinetic Grand Championship races on Wiyot land. Thanks to a collaboration with a team of Wiyot tribal members and staff, we have included Soulatluk (Wiyot language) names for some points and activities on this map. In doing this, we hope to play a small part in sharing information about the historical Indigenous places where we race and play.

Eel River Crossing

11:03 a.m. till they're all over the River

Eel River Under Fernbridge

Watch from the riverbank on the Ferndale side of the Eel River as teams emerge on the Worswick Bar and cross under Fernbridge. Please follow Kinetic Traffic Control directions about parking and crossing the freeway!

Houwutgilh is the name for Fernbridge *

MERCH AT THE FINISH LINE? YOUBETCHA!

Main Street

Some teams are racing to the last moment, trying to make the fastest time. Others are dragged across the Finish Line by their muddy, bloodied Pit Crew. Why do they do this thing? This insanity that keeps us sane? It's all . . .

For the GLORY!

DAY 3:
MEMORIAL DAY
MONDAY MAY 30

Ferndale Finish!

1:00 p.m. 'till they all cross the line one way or another!
